3. Data description

- The data is based on the analysis of the Central Register of Foreigners compiled by the Federal Statistical Office as of December 31 of each year.

People seeking protection are foreigners who are staying in Germany on the basis of international law, humanitarian or political reasons. The reason for their stay is derived from their residence status as recorded in the Central Register of Foreigners.

Foreigners who come to Germany in the course of family reunification generally receive a residence permit for family-related reasons and are thus not counted as people seeking protection. Children born in Germany to people seeking protection do not necessarily receive a status for humanitarian reasons and are therefore not fully included in the statistics on people seeking protection.
